Chapter 460: The Reclamation of Divine Gifts

A New Divine Mandate

The Divine Triad, led by Sung Jin-Woo, convened in the Godverse alongside the Nine Divine Dragons. Their radiant forms stood amidst swirling cosmic energies as Sung Jin-Woo addressed the gathered beings.

"The celestial wings, black hearts, and dragon hearts were bestowed to guide and elevate the worthy," he declared, his voice resonating through countless dimensions. "But mortal curiosity knows no bounds. They seek to exploit and replicate what is sacred."

Ashborn, his golden aura shimmering like the sun, nodded solemnly. "We cannot allow divine blessings to fall into mortal hands after death. They were never meant for mortal research."

Sung Su-Ho, the True Dragon God, spoke with authority. "The dragon heart is a sacred core of life and power. Its misuse would corrupt its very purpose."

Thus, a new decree was issued across the multiverse:

The Divine Reclamation

Upon the death of any mortal who possessed celestial wings, a black heart, or a dragon heart, these divine organs would be reclaimed by their respective creators:

1. Celestial Wings: Ashborn personally reclaimed these ethereal appendages, dissolving them back into the celestial light from which they were formed.

2. Black Hearts: Sung Jin-Woo, with a mere thought, drew the black hearts back into his essence, ensuring that their shadowy power never fell into mortal hands.

3. Dragon Hearts: Sung Su-Ho summoned the fiery cores back into the True Dragon God Realm, where they merged with the eternal flame of his domain.

The Process of Reclamation

As soon as a marked soul departed its mortal vessel, radiant or shadowy energies descended from the heavens or rose from the abyss to reclaim the divine organs:

The wings folded inward, disintegrating into shimmering particles of light.

The black hearts pulsed one last time before vanishing into shadows.

The dragon hearts burned brightly for a fleeting moment before ascending in a fiery spiral.

The souls of these mortals, now purified of their divine enhancements, continued their journey to either Elysium or the Netherworld, depending on their deeds in life.

A Warning to Mortals

Priests and saints across the multiverse conveyed the new decree:

"Do not covet the gifts of the Divine. They are not yours to claim. Upon death, they return to their rightful creators. Any attempt to exploit or replicate these sacred organs will invite divine wrath."

Mortal scholars, who had once dreamed of harnessing the power of these organs, abandoned their research in fear. Laboratories that had secretly experimented with fragments of celestial wings, black hearts, or dragon hearts were dismantled under the watchful eyes of angels and dark angels.

Ensuring Balance

The Nine Divine Dragons, each representing unparalleled power, patrolled their respective realms to enforce this decree.

Sung Ye-Jun, wielding his 1,500 crimson and black wings, declared: "None shall desecrate what belongs to the heavens. We will ensure it."

Sung Ye-Rin, her silver wings shimmering ethereally, added: "Let mortals seek enlightenment, not exploitation."

A Grateful Cosmos

As time passed, peace returned to the multiverse. The reclamation process ensured that no mortal could misuse divine power after death.

Sung Jin-Woo, observing the balance restored, spoke quietly to Ashborn and Sung Su-Ho: "The multiverse must thrive through wisdom, not greed. Only then can it flourish."

The two nodded in agreement, their combined presence a testament to the divine harmony that governed all realms.

Thus, the decree of reclamation became an enduring law, safeguarding the sacred gifts of the Divine Triad and the Nine Divine Dragons for eternity.